Hans Henrik Fischer

Born 1978, Copenhagen

Education

Self-taught painter

Hans Henrik Fischer's work is inspired by man's nature and the motifs describe our darkest sides, darkest thoughts and destructive actions with a hyperrealistic precision. The works are inspired by personal as well as known stories. The contemporary identity and the pop references are both traits, that one will notice when studying the artist's work.

Fischer belongs to a group of artists recognised by their sarcastic and playful humour and often also provocative and dark choice of motifs. The low-brow genre saw the day the first time in America in the 1970's and was understood as a counter reaction to the established artscene at the time.

Throughout the years Fischer has worked with different forms of artistic expression, but always with a figurative universe as an underlying tone. His unmatched technique has developed from a very loose lines via collage to what we see today as very precise and thought through.
